IFL signs Association Agreement with Aflac

Last Tuesday, the Founder & CEO of the Ironman Football League, Chris Chudada, signed an Association Agreement with AFLAC Insurance. According to the deal, the IFL Association Rates will be available to all league staff, players and members of the Ironman Football League. The offer includes the Accident Indemnity Advantage Insurance Policy with 24-hour Accident-Only coverage. It is designed to provide IFL members with cash benefits through out the different stages of care, regardless of the severity of the injury.

“The Ironman Football League is very conscience of the needs of the players that dedicate their spare time in the working man’s league,” said Pat Turay, Independent Agent Representing AFLAC. “I played semi-pro football for seven years and experienced the intensity of the play. Unexpected injuries happen and players still need to bring home a paycheck. That’s were AFLAC steps in to reduce the impact on your finances.”

The Ironman Football League is the “working man’s NFL”. Players do not get compensated to play but instead play for the love of the game. Football is a violent game where injuries commonly occur but these players still need to be able to provide for their families whether they get injured or not. That is why league CEO Chris Chudada is pleased about the IFL’s latest partnership with Aflac.

“With this agreement, our players and staff will have the peace of mind and the assurance that their families will have help financially if or when they get injured.” Chudada says, “This policy basically ensures an injured player financial assistance & care during a very stressful time.”
